[Madison, Wis.] – The Natural Resource Development Association, a new Wisconsin-based advocacy group, launched today in support of efforts to encourage clean and safe economic development of our state’s natural resources.

“Wisconsin has a quality workforce and beautiful outdoors, and the Natural Resource Development Association believes those assets offer our state a bright future,” said Nathan Conrad, executive director of the Natural Resource Development Association. “We will work with state and local policymakers to promote the safe and clean economic development of our natural resources, and make Wisconsin a leader in having both a strong economy and a clean environment.”
