Democrat Randy Bryce is out to upset Republican House Speaker Paul Ryan of Janesville in the 1st Congressional District next year.

But first, he might have to get a handle on his tweeting.

Amid reports that the first charges may be handed down in the probe led by special prosecutor Robert Mueller III, Bryce tried to crack wise Sunday.

The iron worker from Caledonia ended up taking a veiled swipe at President Donald Trump's daughter, Ivanka, and her husband, Jared Kushner.

Bryce tweeted: "Don't worry @jaredkushner regardless of what might go down – she'll be okay. #MuellerTime." The tweet was accompanied by a photo of Ivanka

Trump sitting next to Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau.

Bryce's Democratic opponent, Cathy Myers of Janesville, fired back: "Don't worry #WI01, I'm going to win my primary v @IronStache, so you don't need to vote for someone who thinks women need a man to be okay."

Daniel Dale, Washington correspondent for the Toronto Star, noted: "Democratic congressional candidate suggests Ivanka will hook up with Trudeau, or something, if her husband gets arrested."
