Today, Vice President Pence is in Wisconsin to bail out his buddy Governor Scott Walker's floundering campaign. And it's no wonder why Pence is committed to keeping Walker in power: the two are in lockstep when it comes to putting special interests and their campaign donors ahead of middle class families.

"The people of Wisconsin know that Scott Walker and Mike Pence are two peas in a pod, putting national political ambitions and their special interest donors ahead of hard-working families and small businesses," said DGA Press Secretary Melissa Miller. "Voters have had enough of their warped priorities and will make that clear at the ballot box in six short months."
