Brookfield, Wis. – With Democratic candidate for governor Tony Evers promising to put violent criminals back on our streets, Wisconsinites ought to know where Two-Faced Tammy Baldwin stands on this specific issue. In the past, Baldwin voted against building a new prison for Wisconsin criminals.

“As a state legislator, Two-Faced Tammy voted against building new prisons, saying money should be spent elsewhere. Her radical position falls in line with Tony Evers, who she calls a ‘champion for children,’ and his dangerous proposal to prematurely release repeat violent criminals,” said Leah Vukmir campaign manager Jess Ward. “From hanging out in New York with the abolish ICE crowd, voting to reallocate money away from keeping felons out of our communities, Wisconsin families can’t trust Tammy Baldwin to protect them.”
