(Brown County, Wis.) – Brown County Executive Troy Streckenbach is issuing the following statement regarding the announcement that a community testing site will be at the Resch Center beginning Monday, May 4, 2020.

“I am happy to finally announce that we have established a community testing site at the Resch Center for symptomatic individuals who live or work in Brown County,” says Streckenbach. “This has been something I have been asking for and now is finally coming to fruition.

I would like to thank all the front-line workers who are coming together to make this happen, including the Wisconsin National Guard and Department of Health Services. I also want to thank our local health care partners and members of Unified Command through our Public Health Office for mobilizing this plan. Increased testing is pivotal in helping Brown County ‘bounce back’.

I encourage anyone in our community, if they are feeling symptomatic per the guidance from our Public Health Office, to sign up to get a free test. It is important, not just for your own health and well-being, but for your loved ones and the entire community.”
