MADISON, Wis. – UW Health’s frontline health care providers are the focal point in our fight against COVID-19. Their commitment to patient care and to our community is unmatched.

COVID-19 has forced us to adjust so much about how patients seek health care and how we provide it during this crisis. Through a combination of hard work, dedication, flexibility and ingenuity, our health care heroes are making sure the needs of our patients and our community come first, even in these difficult times.

UW Health is grateful for all of its staff who are working so diligently during this unprecedented time.

Today, we are sharing interviews with a UW Health nurse and doctor who are on the frontlines treating patients with COVID-19. Hear directly from them on how they are stepping up to this unprecedented challenge.
