Ends quarantine in accordance with health guidelines

[Waukesha, WI] – On Monday, Rebecca Kleefisch will resume in-person campaigning in her run for governor. Last week, Kleefisch had announced that she tested positive for COVID-19 after being exposed at church. Kleefisch will head to La Crosse County today to tour a local health clinic and attend other meetings. She released the following statement:

“I am so thankful for the outpouring of support and prayers that I received from friends across Wisconsin last week. The virtual world that we now live in allowed us to lose no ground during my COVID diagnosis, and I’m greatly looking forward to getting back out on the campaign trail to share my vision for a stronger Wisconsin.”

Kleefisch completed her 10-day quarantine and received a negative test result late last week.
