PRAIRIE DU CHIEN, WI – Yesterday, the Washington Examiner published an article featuring statements from NRCC Chairman Rep. Tom Emmer. Rep. Emmer made it clear, in no uncertain terms, that Wisconsin’s 3rd District will be the first step for Republicans to take back control of the house.

Following Derrick Van Orden’s massive fundraising quarter, outraising Kind’s entire year-to-date total, it’s clear that Derrick is the number one Republican challenger in the country.

Voters see that Kind is just another Washington politician, supporting Joe Biden and Nancy Pelosi’s policies that are driving the inflation hurting Wisconsin families, opening our borders, and embracing dangerous anti-law enforcement rhetoric that is leading to a rapid increase in crime.

“Democrats are the party of ‘defund the police,’ and the voters know it,” said Rep. Tom Emmer of Minnesota, the NRCC chairman, during a Thursday morning video news conference with reporters. How confident is Emmer? More than a year before the general election, he is declaring some veteran Democratic incumbents defeated.

“Ron Kind in Wisconsin’s 3rd Congressional District — he’s not coming back,” Emmer said. “If he chooses to run for reelection, he’s going to lose.” Kind, a Democrat, has been in office for more than two decades and managed to survive amid Wisconsin’s competitive political environment.
