As election season ramps into full gear, the airwaves are flush with ads from the governor and his allies touting his so-called accomplishments.

What is missing from these ads is the harsh reality that Evers hasn't really done anything in the four years since he was elected governor.

He touts a historic $2.4 billion tax cut but fails to mention that tax cut was engineered by Republicans in the state budget. His original budget recommendation actually included more than a billion dollars in tax increases.

He touts that Wisconsin schools are ranked 8th in the nation. But the data collected for that ranking comes primarily from 2018, while Gov. Walker was still in office.

He claims that he fixed the roads. But even the funding required to fix the roads was largely provided for in the Republican budget. The same budget that rejected Evers massive gas tax increase that would have been tied to inflation. Republicans fixed the roads without raising taxes.

The list goes on.

Aside from handing out millions of your dollars in ARPA funding, compliments of the federal government, what has Tony Evers actually accomplished as governor?
