Today, Governor Tony Evers and the Wisconsin Department of Health Services (DHS) held the final event of the “Thank You Tour: Moving Forward Together” event series to thank Wisconsin communities for their COVID-19 response efforts. Our last stop was in Milwaukee to recognize local public health officials from the southeastern region for their efforts over the past two years.

“Our state’s public health workers have endured so much these past years, helping folks through some of the most challenging of circumstances, and it is no small part due to their selfless efforts that our state is in the positive position we are today,” said Gov. Evers. “Meeting with, hearing from, and expressing our gratitude to members and leaders of our public health system, we’ve heard so much about the challenges they’ve faced and how we can move forward, together, to continue building on the difficult work we’ve done these last few years. I join the people of Wisconsin in thanking these extraordinary and dedicated public servants who’ve given so much – thank you.”
