Gov. Tony Evers launched a new TV ad saying while in office he'll always try to do the right thing.

The campaign didn't release details of the buy behind the latest spot. He has $2.4 million in paid media reserved for the final week of the campaign, according to AdImpact.

In the spot, Evers says he's worked with both parties to invest in schools, cut income taxes and put the state on solid financial footing. He also lays out what he won't do.

"I won't cut public school funding. I won't stop trying to find good ideas from both parties, and I'll never allow radical politicians to make decisions about abortion. That should be left to women and their doctors," Evers says before asking for viewers' votes.
