Run for Something (RFS), the groundbreaking organization that supports strong voices in the next generation of progressive leadership, has endorsed Anna Halverson in the contested Democratic primary in the 80th Assembly District.

“The GOP overturned Roe by playing the long game at the local level,” said RFS co-founder and co-executive director, Amanda Litman. “We need pro-choice candidates in every seat, up and down the ballot, to help win back abortion rights. We’re here to help the next generation lead this fight.”

“It is an honor to join the strong, progressive, pro-choice candidates all across the Country who have earned the RFS endorsement,” Halverson said. “Run For Something is a leader in supporting candidates like me who are stepping up to meet this critical moment and fighting for reproductive rights. I welcome their support.”

Run for Something announced 74 candidate endorsements today. The endorsement process includes an extensive internal review with background check, staff interview and insight from local state experts. The endorsed candidates are diverse:

- 62% (46) are women
- 43% (32) are people of color
- 23% (17) are LGBTQIA+

Amanda Litman and Ross Morales Rocketto launched RFS on Jan. 20, 2017 to help progressive candidates run for office in order to strengthen progressive representation today and in the future. Run for Something supports talented, passionate candidates who advocate for progressive values. A list of the endorsed candidates is here: <https://directory.runforsomething.net/candidates/>
