MADISON- Amy Loudenbeck, Republican candidate for Wisconsin Secretary of State, will file a strong fundraising report (cover sheet attached) with a growing balance of cash on hand available to support a robust GOTV / “get out the vote” plan for the August 9th partisan primary election.

“People from across Wisconsin are excited to finally have a candidate for Secretary of State they can enthusiastically support and I am confident our campaign will have the financial resources needed to execute a robust GOTV strategy and reach as many voters as possible to win the August 9 republican primary.

“My record of winning elections and my reputation for getting things done while in office distinguish me from all other candidates in this race. Wisconsin voters are ready to return respect and value to the office of Secretary of State and believe in my ability to win and deliver real results.

“I am humbled and encouraged by all of the financial contributions, but I am equally excited by the amount of grassroots support from activists and voters; they know I have a plan to make this office work again and will take that message to the next level after the August 9 primary in order to win the November general election.
