“I was surprised to receive a subpoena since I have no information to provide about the events surrounding January 6th.

My conversation with former President Trump took place many months after January 6th and has been about his concerns regarding issues in Wisconsin with the way the 2020 election was handled, a fact that has been publicly documented on numerous occasions in the media.

Given how close we are to the midterms, this subpoena seems to be more about partisan politics than actual fact-finding.

The Constitution protects these sorts of communications, and in light of the clear political nature of this request, we intend to go to court to fight for the immunity given to state leaders under these circumstances.”
