Libertarian Party of Wisconsin (LPWI) officials, as a service to the public, sent a questionnaire to all four registered candidates for the one open seat on the Wisconsin State Supreme Court. With only two of the candidates to advance after the Tuesday, February 21st, state-wide spring primary, only candidate Judge Jennifer Dorow responded to the LPWI's questionnaire. The two-top vote getting candidates in the primary will advance to the state's spring general election in April. Voters can view the questionnaire and Judge Dorow's answers on the party's website, at: <https://lpwi.org/2023/02/15/judge-jennifer-dorow-questionnaire/> .

The questionnaire asked all the candidates to state such things as their judicial philosophy, and how they will make rulings; their stance on the practice of judicial activism, or where judges can create new law with their rulings without legislative oversight or voter consent; and other questions on role models, interpretations of original law, etc.

The Libertarian Party of Wisconsin supports the individual's right to live their own life free of unreasonable government obstructions and coercion; the people's right to own and dispose of the property they have earned by their hard labor; and to pursue their own happiness that should never harm other free people or steal the property of others. The LPWI believes in an independent judiciary that protects the rights of all people to live free of the forceful coercion used by governments. As 18th Century legal commentator William Blackstone wrote, "...the public good is in nothing more essentially interested, than in the protection of every individual's private rights,..."
