

New Biden ad focuses on economy, says he's 'getting results that matter'

Joe Biden's reelection campaign is launching a new TV ad in Wisconsin that proclaims he's "getting results that matter."

The spot is part of a 16-week, $25 million advertising campaign that was previously announced. The new ad will run in Wisconsin on broadcast TV in Milwaukee, as well as on digital across the state. That spot is slated to run during Thursday's NFL season opener between the Detroit Lions and Kansas City Chiefs.

The campaign didn't release specifics on how much it was spending on the latest ad in Wisconsin alone.

The narrator in the spot says it was predicted that millions would lose their jobs and the economy would collapse, "But this president refused to let that happen."

The narrator ticks off a list of accomplishments such as fixing supply chains and "fighting corporate greed" before noting inflation is down to 3 percent and unemployment is at its lowest level in decades.

"There's more to do, but President Biden is getting results that matter," the narrator says to close the spot.
