MADISON – Wisconsin Property Taxpayers, Inc., the state's largest taxpayer advocacy organization, has announced that Paul Rozeski was promoted to Director of Government Relations and Member Services.

"We are excited about what Paul's leadership and business experience will bring to WPT," said Mike Marsch, President of WPT. "He was a clear choice for WPT to keep it's momentum and continue to rack up wins on behalf of our members and all Wisconsin taxpayers."

Rozeski combines almost a decade of small business ownership, years of management experience, and most recently, five years of member relations with the Wisconsin Property Taxpayer's business members in southern Wisconsin.

"For years I have been seeing the challenges Wisconsin small businesses and farmers confront," said Rozeski. "I'm looking forward to fighting on their behalf."

In this role, Paul will lead member advocacy efforts on policy and governmental initiatives in Wisconsin as well as member benefits and resources.

Rozeski graduated with a B.B.A in Marketing from the University of Wisconsin – Whitewater. He now lives in Madison with his wife Abbie and their children.
