Wisconsin Supreme Court candidate Maria Lazar dodged questions in a recent interview about whether the results of the 2020 presidential election should have been overturned, this follows a network of election deniers who attempted to block certification of the election, lining up behind her campaign.

When directly asked in a recent interview, Lazar refused to state if she thought the 2020 election results should have been overturned, prompting further questions about her stance on the election's legitimacy. Lazar's refusal to answer comes as the Wisconsin Supreme Court could be asked to decide disputes over election rules and voting rights ahead of the next presidential election cycle.

"Maria Lazar couldn't give a straight answer about the legitimacy of the 2020 election, and the politicians backing her campaign are the same election deniers who tried to overturn the results," said American Bridge 21st Century spokesperson Tiffany Vaughn. "Wisconsin voters deserve to know that the people lining up behind Lazar already tried to undermine American democracy."

Lazar has welcomed endorsements from multiple Republican members of Congress who supported efforts to overturn the 2020 election, including:

- Rep. Tom Tiffany \(WI\) – Voted against certifying the Electoral College results following the January 6 attack on the U.S. Capitol.
- Rep. Glenn Grothman \(WI\) – Supported efforts to investigate the results of the 2020 presidential election in Congress.
- Rep. Scott Fitzgerald \(WI\) – Signed onto a legal brief supporting a lawsuit seeking to overturn the 2020 election results in several battleground states.
- Rep. Bryan Steil \(WI\) – Repeatedly raised allegations about election integrity and supported investigations into the 2020 election results.

Lazar is also supported by Jim Troupis, a lawyer for Trump who notably advised Republican electors to give Wisconsin's votes to Trump post-election and was later indicted on felony charges. Together, these endorsements place Lazar within a broader political network that attempted to undermine the will of Wisconsin voters.

As an appeals court judge, Lazar joined a ruling allowing individuals promoting election conspiracy theories to obtain sensitive voter information — a decision critics warned could expose private voter data. The ruling was later overturned by the Wisconsin Supreme Court.

Recent reporting in the Wisconsin Examiner highlighted how Lazar has built her campaign around claims that she will serve as an “independent” justice despite receiving endorsements and donations from prominent Republicans and anti-abortion groups. The strategy mirrors messaging used by previous conservative candidates who also claimed impartiality while running with deep ties to Republican political networks.
