MADISON, Wis. – The Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources (DNR) today announced that the spring issue of Wisconsin Natural Resources magazine is now available in print and online. Spring in Wisconsin brings unique opportunities to enjoy the outdoors, and the latest issue is packed with stories to help you embrace the season.

The cover story celebrates the 75th anniversary of the Wisconsin State Natural Areas Program, the largest conservation program of its kind in the U.S. Learn how this program protects the very best examples of Wisconsin's natural communities and the rare species that call them home with “salute to state natural areas” and “SNAs in the spotlight.” Readers will also meet some of the vital volunteers that dedicate their time to preserving these special places.

Warming weather means travel season is around the corner for animals and humans alike. Learn how Wisconsin's animal crossings create “safer roads for people and wildlife” and watch for the colorful, oozing, amoeba-like slime mold as it feeds and moves its way through spring.

Also celebrate over 35 years of the Knowles-Nelson Stewardship Program and it's protection of Wisconsin's outdoors and check in on some awesome species like prairie-chickens and wood turtles.

Spring brings tons to enjoy; from nicer weather to preparing for upcoming outdoor adventures and spring fishing. Unlock the best of the season with this issue.
