ICYMI: Jenna Jacobson Blames Staff For Political Games, Lying to Voters

MADISON, Wis. - In case you missed it, Jenna Jacobson joined WRCO News for the very first time and deflected blame about her record after she lied to voters about the legislation she supported and fought for in Madison.

During the interview, Jacobson feigned innocence and blamed her staff for signing onto legislation well after session had ended, stating that “there are no rules” against it and that she “communicated with my staffer that I wanted to sign onto some bills. Again, there's no rules, there's no set timelines. He got busy with constituent work, things that were a little bit more pressing, end of session stuff. He put everything in a long email and sent it to the clerk, or maybe two emails, I'm not entirely certain, said 'sign her on'. And they signed me on.”

“This is slimy politics at its worst, and instead of answering voters' questions about why she lied about her record, Jacobson passed the buck,” said Wisconsin State Senator Pat Testin (R-24). “That’s not leadership, it’s exactly what voters hate about politicians. We need leaders like Howard Marklein who have gotten stuff done in Madison.”

Don’t Forget: Jacobson added her name to DOZENS of pieces of legislation to try and pad her resume. On everything from data centers to insulin costs, Jacobson added her name to pieces of legislation AFTER session was over or legislation action was already settled.
