Dan Kohl Statement on Comey Testimony

June 8, 2017

Dan Kohl issued the following statement on today's Senate Intelligence Committee testimony of former FBI Director James Comey:

"No matter your political leanings, Director Comey's testimony underlines the importance of the American people learning the full account of the manner in which a hostile foreign adversary influenced our elections.

We know that Russia interfered in our election, and now we must know the full extent of those involvements. Most importantly, we need to know if any Americans aided them in those efforts.

Congressional Republicans are failing in their Constitutional obligation to get to the bottom of Russian interference and hold the White House accountable. We need an independent commission, and if Republicans refuse to do their duty, they will be replaced by those who will.

Continuing to view this investigation as a partisan issue will do nothing to help the American people learn the truth. Getting all the facts on the table is an important step toward ensuring the health of our democracy."
